

What we find missing in the current analyses is recognition that Massachusetts's forests are rapidly being sacrificed to building development. This is not because the current owners want to destroy their forests but because the economics of forest ownership is highly unattractive in comparison to sale for building. A strong biomass industry in the State could help to reverse this. If properly regulated Biomass would increase forest preservation not threaten it.

Jack Lochhead
Danielle Lochhead
Conway, MA 01341